

District of Columbia.
County of Alexandria, to wit: 1818.
November Term,
IN CHANCERY.
James Sackerson, Complainant, vs.
Catherine F. McCall, and John Creighton and William Gilham, the two last under the firm of John Creighton & Company, Defendants.

Defendant Catherine F. McCall not having entered her appearance and you security according to the statute and rules of this court, and it appearing to the satisfaction of the court, upon affidavit that the said defendant, Catherine F. McCall, is not an inhabitant of this District—on motion of the said complainant, by his counsel, it is ordered. That the said defendant, Catherine F. McCall, do appear here on the first day of the next Term, and enter appearance to the suit, and give security for performing the decrees of the court, and that the other defendants, John Creighton & Company, do not pay away, convey or create, the rights by them owing to, or the estate or effects in their hands belonging to the said absent defendant, Catherine McCall, until the further order or decree of this court; and that a copy of this order be forthwith published for two months successively in one of the public newspapers published in this country; and that another copy be posted at the front door of the court-house of the said county.

PROPOSALS
BY JOSEPH M. SANDERSON, for publishing by subscription,
A BIOGRAPHY OF THE SIGNERS TO THE Declaration of Independence, ACCOMPANIED WITH PLATES; to which will be annexed a history of the proceedings of congress during the passage of the law, and the Declaration itself, with fac-simile engravings of the signatures.
By PAUL ALLEN, Esq.
TO THE PUBLIC.
It seems a little surprising that among so many subjects as have been presented for American Biography, the lives of those who have affixed their signatures to the Declaration of Independence have been overlooked or disregarded. The eyes of thousands have dwelt with rapture upon the document that announced to the world that these United Colonies were, and of right ought to be, free, sovereign, and independent states; while we are better acquainted with the handwriting than with the characters of many of those illustrious men who have added their signatures to that instrument. The founders of the only remaining republic on the globe, have, with few splendid exceptions, gone to their rest, and it behooves a generous posterity, desirous of their obligations, to preserve their fame. The longer we neglect the subject of so sacred a debt, the more difficult does the payment become. Traits of individual character are fugitive and es-cendent; and if they are not snatched at the hand of the Biographer, at an early season, from the cold grasp of death, they partake of the oblivion of the body.
It is not the object of the present attempt, in dealing in this profusion of indiscriminate and unparaphrased panegyric, so often and so easily dignified with the name of Biography: we wish to represent the characters as they were; they stand in need of no panegyric; and we earnestly solicit from surviving relations and friends of those revolutionary patriots all the information they can lend to a development of character.
It is the creature of circumstance, and we wish to show the progress of those patriot from their first resistance of colonial oppression, until they stood forth the noble and undaunted champions of their country's dependence. All this can only be done by a familiar acquaintance with the lives of these men, and whoever of the surviving relations or relatives will furnish facts and circumstances in their possession to unfold and illustrate their characters, shall be entitled to a copy of the work as a recompense. It is contemplated, wherever it is practicable, further to embellish the mediated work with correct likenesses of the objects of our biography, executed by the most eminent artists in the country. For this purpose we again solicit the assistance of their surviving relatives and friends. If they will transmit to the publisher any engraving or portrait from which a copy may be taken, the original shall be faithfully returned, and shall likewise be remunerated with a copy of the work. In the first number it is proposed to give an account of the Declaration of Independence, from the first conception until its final passage into a law, a period embracing much curious and secret history; finally, we promise to add to our number the Declaration of Independence itself, with fac-simile engravings of the signatures. We have now compendiously stated the objects of our present undertaking, and we hope that it will be unnecessary to mention that no exertions on our part shall be spared.

The public are now in possession of our first number, which does indeed seem to be desired, by the avidity so recently displayed for the possession of the Declaration of Independence, since it is of very little importance to become acquainted with a man's life and writing without a previous knowledge of the man. The secret history of our Declaration of Independence, the lives of those who have affixed their signatures to that instrument, accompanied by their likenesses, and finally the Declaration itself with facsimile of the signatures, will bring into our view the prominent facts of that great crisis.

CONDITIONS.
The work will be published in number, or half volumes, of 150 pages octavo, and will be contained in ten numbers.
It will be printed on paper made expressly for the purpose, and delivered to subscribers at two dollars and fifty cents per volume or number, payable on deliv-Subscriptions will be received at the office of the Alexandria Gazette.

EXCHANGE BANKING HOUSE, AND BROKER'S OFFICE.
Bridge-street, Georgetown.
THIS is intended as a permanent establishment, and the community will find it one of the greatest conveniences in the United States, and of great public utility.
At this house the fair exchange on the different bank notes from every part of the union can at all times be had. It is to be hoped that, by the operations of this office, the community will get rid of a host of Shocks, Shavers, Secret and Running Brokers, who infest the District, frequently proclaiming the failure of country solvent banks, for the express purpose of purchasing the notes of such institutions at great discounts. Business under the following heads will be transacted. This establishment possesses funds to negotiate for any amount, and all business done for cash.
1st. All bank checks, bills at sight, post notes not due, and bank notes from all parts of the United States, bought and sold.
2d. All notes, bills of exchange, dividends and interests, collected and remitted according to orders.
3d. The notes of the United States bank and all of its branches received at par.
4th. Strangers, citizens, and others, may deposit current money for safe keeping—and if left for thirty days, or longer, will receive at the rate of six per cent. per annum for the same.
5th. All business in the line of a money broker promptly attended to for a small commission.
6th. All southern and western traders, bringing to the district large sums of southern and western bank notes, can deposit for safe keeping, and draw for the same as may suit their convenience.
7th. Prompt attention paid to the orders of all respectable brokers and exchange offices throughout the United States—who will please to favor me occasionally with their rates of exchange on bank notes and bills.

Exchange & Broker's Office.
Georgetown, District of Columbia.
ROMULUS RIGGS.
At his office, next door below Craw-ford's tavern, Bridge-street, Georgetown, will exchange all kinds of Bank Notes on the most reasonable terms. All persons who may have notes on the banks of North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia, would do well to call on him, as he is largely in the purchase of that kind of money, and will take it on the most reasonable terms. Persons travelling to the Western Country may at all times get the Bank Notes of the Western Banks at a fair discount, by calling at his Office. For the information of all persons throughout the U.
States, R. Riggs makes it known, that all of the Banks of the District of Columbia pay their notes on demand in specie; and it would be much to the advantage of the merchants, and trading to the South and West, to encourage the circulation of the Notes of the Banks of Georgetown, Washington and Alexandria, as it will at all times answer for remittances to the large commercial and Atlantic towns—all persons emigrating or travelling to the westward should be very particular and take the Notes of the Banks of the District of Columbia, as they will find them the most current, there being no counterfeits on the District Banks. The Merchants' Bank of Alexandria has long, and failed—all persons should be on their guard, as they will be imposed on.

Gone to the Southward or Westward;
A YELLOW WOMAN, called Celia Detcher, in the 23d year of her age, about 5 feet 2 or 3 inches high—marks like moles on the right side of her face, which, with several letters on her left arm, were made with india ink. She is about four months gone in a state of pregnancy—followed her husband, Jim Clark, a yellow man, who was purchased from this place and taken away in company with a large number of slaves, about two week ago, by a man of the name of Bassett. It is supposed they have gone to the westward. Celia was born free, and had with her a notarial certificate of her freedom, and description of her person. Her mother, the subscriber, is much afflicted by her manner of going away, and desires that any humane people who may chance to meet with her, will persuade her to return, being apprehensive that when she gets into a strange country, where she will be unknown and out of the reach of her friends and those who would be likely to protect her, attempts may be made by some avaricious and unprincipled persons, to deprive her of her liberty, and sell her for a slave. Should any such attempts be made, fifty dollars reward will be paid to any person who will communicate such information as shall lead to the conviction of the offenders, and the recovery of the woman.
HANNAH DETCHER.
Alexandria, October 8, 1818.

To the Public.

An unusual sensibility has been excited in the minds of our countrymen by the copper plate engraving of the Declaration of Independence recently published, accompanied by fac-similes of the signatures of those illustrious patriots who framed the document by which our independence was announced to the world. We feel, while we dwell on those signatures, as if we were admitted into the immediate presence of characters so exalted, and we seem for a time to participate in all the emotion which they felt on the approach of so awful a crisis—Hostile armies, desolate fields, towns and cities in conflagration—carnage and death in its most frightful forms appeared in prophetic vision on the one hand, and more than all, the complicated horrors, ignominy and slavery were presented for their acceptance on the other; they deliberated; they paused; they trembled; and at last solemnly appealing to the God of battles, they resolved that the United States were and ought to be, free, sovereign and independent. These illustrious patriots, with few solitary exceptions, have now mingled with the common mould—they survive only in their country's glory and in the recollection of a grateful people. But it would be consoling to the present generation, separated as they now are from those patriots, by the intervention of the tomb, to become more intimately acquainted with their revolutionary benefactors. We love to dwell on the features of such men, snatched by the pencil from the oblivion of the grave, and emulate the prominent traits of their biography. Impressed with these ideas, the subscriber proposes, if suitable encouragement is given, to publish the lives of those patriots in numbers, until the whole is completed. The work will be executed in a style not inferior to any European productions, and the portraits by masters of ac-knowledgeed merit. The biography will be written by Paul Allen, Esq., whose familiarity with the several signs, whose familiarity with the privations and hardships they had to undergo, and whose well known talents will be sufficient to ensure the pretrance of an enlightened people. In the execution of this work, all that the publisher dares to promise is, that he will endeavor to deserve the confidence of his countrymen, and that no exertion on his part will be wanting to prevent an abuse of that confidence. He ventures to solicit the assistance of those gentlemen in possession of authentic facts and anecdotes, by communicating the intelligence that will serve to illustrate the characters and to enrich the biography of those founders of the American Republic.—Those who are in possession of their portraits would enlarge the obligation by a loan of the same.
A prospectus with the terms will be given in a few days.

ers, shall receive one copy of the work.

Laws of the District of Columbia.
In the press, and will shortly be published,
By DAVIS & FORCE,
IN THE CITY OF WASHINGTON, A COMPLETE CODE OF LAWS FOR THE
DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.
With a copious Index, prepared and reported by the Hon. chief justice CRAWFORD, to the congress of the United States, for their sanction; agreeably to the provisions of the act of the 29th April, 1816, entitled "an act authorizing the judges of the circuit court and the attorney for the District of Columbia, to prepare a code of jurisprudence for the said District."

The laws by which this District is now governed, can only be found by reference to the numerous volumes containing those of the United States, of the states of Virginia and Maryland, and of England—therefore the acquisition of this code (which will comprise the whole in one volume), must be considered as of the first importance, by all magistrates, gentlemen of the bar, and citizens in general, who have, heretofore, experienced the necessity of a work of this description.
A few extra copies will be printed for such persons only as apply previous to the publication of the work.
Gentlemen who wish to be supplied, will please to leave their names at this office.

LAWRENCE, WILSON & Co
December 12

At a meeting of the Washington Society of Alexandria, at Brown's hotel, on Monday the 22nd of February, 1819, the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, unanimously, That the thanks of this Society be presented to Richard Henry Lee, esq. for his very elegant oration delivered this morning; and that he be requested to furnish a copy thereof for publication.

Extract from the minutes.
C. P. THOMPSON, Secretary.

ORATION.

FELLOW CITIZENS:

At the courteous request of a highly respectable society of Alexandria, I have undertaken to make an effort, a feeble one, I am conscious, to sustain the honors which it has since its institution, paid, on this his natal day, to our illustrious Washington. The dignity of subjects appropriate to this occasion; the wisdom and eloquence of those who have preceded me: the presence of so numerous and so refined an audience, excite a diffidence unfelt before—a diffidence under which I should sink, did not the reflection cheer me, that even an attempt to pay an eulogium to a chief so admired, to a citizen so ardently beloved, would be indulgently viewed; that the pale taper which I present, would be lost in the lustre of the splendid theme.

The scene too I now witness, is an animating one: under its influence my bosom elates with emotions almost unutterable; it assures me that the genial and exalted feelings of freemen still glow within the breasts of Americans; for this scene is voluntarily displayed in honor of liberty's favorite hero, of freedom's triumphant champion. It is animating; for it evinces the characteristics of an uncorrupted people—gratitude for great and signal benefits conferred—admiration for gallant and generous achievements—respect for wisdom, and a due estimation of unsullied merit. It is animating; for it attests that our national prosperity is yet unimpaired, as we have not met here to brood in mournful silence over the recollections of blessings once enjoyed. It is animating; for it demonstrates to the world that our political liberties are yet safe and entire—that without fear or restraint, yes, above all control, we, the countrymen of Washington, may meet before the eyes of the rulers of our nation, and indulge many of the finest feelings of our nature.—We have not withdrawn from the scowling and jealous frowns of a tyrant to celebrate our former triumphs; we have not retired, a small and melancholy band, to gloomy solitudes; we have not fled behind Helicon and Oeta, to commemorate virtues and exploits, even the mention of which might be punished as an insult, because felt as a contrast; we need not whisper the deeds of our ancestors, nor lift the finger of silence, lest we provoke the angry mandate of power, bidding us to cease our praise of liberty and Washington.

In the consciousness of the possession, and in the full fruition of such high prerogatives, let us raise our minds in grateful and fearful adoration to that great Being, by whose mercy or justice empires rise or fall. Whether we reflect on the past, or ponder on the present, or indulge joyous anticipations of the future, let us not for a moment forget Him who was the mighty deliverer of our forefathers; who is our vigilant guardian; and who may be conciliated as the omnipotent protector of our descendants.

It has been said, that "to perpetuate the memory of meritorious individuals, is, in effect, an essential service to the community." The truth of the remark has been felt from the earliest ages; and history shows it to be the dictate alike of untutored and civilized man. We perceive it as well in the rude mound of the forest, as in the inscriptions on polished statues and stately mausoleums. We listen to the sentiment in the wild song of the savage, and read it in the measured numbers of the poet. It is the voice of nature which proclaims the praises of a benefactor. It is the admiration of wisdom that we honor the great and good; for it is a beautiful harmony of moral ordination that honors paid to the memory of those who have saved and adorned the state, excite the living to its service, and prepare future heroes for its defence. Hence the wisest and most refined nations of antiquity thus employed their eloquence, and thus exerted every effort of their art and wealth. We dwell with rapture on the sublime periods of Pericles, which kindled a living flame of patriotism, while he endeavored (what future ages declare he has accomplished) to immortalize the memory of those Athenians who had fallen in battle. Long did their sons repair to Ma-ration to imbibe, over the monument erected out of the spoils of the Persian foe, abhorrence for tyranny and love of country. And in a later age, the observer beheld in its dilapidation, the decline at once of Grecian freedom and virtue. Greece and Rome ceased to be free when they became insensible to the worth and valor of Phocion—to the wisdom and integrity of Cato. The poetry and eloquence of America have expressed her gratitude, may we not behold her arts testifying a people's administration of their warrior and sage. We rejoice at a motion to this effect in the councils of the nation;—ere long, and the traveller shall pause in his course to contemplate on Potomac's bank some noble monument of national gratitude to him whose name shall be as immortal as its floods.

The day which we have assembled to honor, is conspicuous in the annals of mankind. A great and happy people hail it—distant nations remark its return—tyrants feel more deeply their disgrace—the hopes of desponding patriots revive—the same and example of the great man whose birthday rekindle a nation's joy, ennoble human nature, and belong to the human race.

To delineate the character of Washington, would, perhaps, be superfluous; to recount the actions of his life, of which we are acquainted in the blessings they have wrought, an idle repetition;—yet it would be injustice to my audience to suppose that their interest had ceased to be excited in the history of events which established the independence of their country, and the glory of its leader.

The generous pride of an admiring people has delighted in the results of comparisons drawn between the worthies and warriors of past times and their favorite hero. A calm contemplation of his character, however, seeks no aid in the equivocal light and shades of parallels and contrasts to establish its claim to unequal greatness. I would insult you to compare our Washington with either the conqueror at Issus or at Austerlitz; to contrast the adventurous daring of the one, the impetuous boldness, the overwhelming invasions of the other, with the unshaken firmness, the unconquerable fortitude, of the American commander—no, we point you to an intrepid chief, who never shrunk from danger and death; whose "magnanimity had triumphed over the last infirmity of virtuous minds," and prohibited him to sacrifice public utility and the lives of thousands to personal glory; who, fighting for liberty himself, "was too just to invade the rights" of others. We lead you to the camp of Valley Forge, to witness a scene of awful heroism; to behold a chief whose heart is bleeding at the indelible hardships of the little band, which stern misfortune, pinching poverty, and wintry storms, yet leave him, within sight of a haughty and numerous foe, vauntingly displaying "the pride, pomp, and circumstance of war," and entrenched within the capitol, firmly grasping the banners on which now depended the last hopes of its dismayed and despairing country! We turn with indignation from the despot who retained by force the sword entrusted to him, and employed it for purposes of unexampled tyranny at home, and desolation abroad; to the hero, who, when he had repelled the invaders, and established the liberties, resigned the powers of a conqueror to the civil authorities of his native land. All Europe expressed her wonder; all America poured forth her admiration! We turn with increased detestation from the Champ de Mars, where a monarch sits upon a throne, surrounded by slaves, and receives professions of love amid the files of a pampered soldiery, to the virtuous citizen who is called by the unanimous suffrage of three millions of freemen to the station of first magistrate; whose way is every where greeted with acclamations of unfeigned affection; whose path is strewn with the olive and laurel by the wives and daughters of those whom he had rescued from oppression. We point you to the man who guided with consummate wisdom the republic whose liberties he had achieved by heroic valor.

"Nor was he skilled in awful schemes alone, And how to make a mighty people free; But equal coolness, sound integrity, A firm, unshaken, uncorrupted soul."—And, "burning strong, A steady spirit, regularly free." Not vainly blazing for his country's good, These exalted each, the statesman's light. Into the patriot's.

Such, my fellow citizens, was the man whom it is the honor of America to have produced; whose life and character shed over the dark waste of human infirmities a glorious and consolatory splendor; of whom an orator of another land has spoken the universal sense, when he says, "he gave us more than any other, the example of perfect man."

In the parting advice of Washington, embodying the reflections of a correct and profound statesman, many topics may be found well entitled to the continued and deep attention of the American people. And we know not a more valuable employment for this occasion, than a consideration of that fa-lure of government under which we are enjoying such unexampled blessings, in the execution of which Washington labored; to the doubtful experiment of its efficiency, his wisdom and virtues imparted solidity, and ensured success.

No one can read the public addresses of our Patriot, without remarking the earnestness with which he constantly urged upon the minds of his countrymen, the importance of an harmonious and indissoluble union of the states. The establishment of a federal government on some solid basis, which moving within its proper sphere, not interrupting the state sovereignties, yet drawing to one point, the separate energies of remote and extended communities, he thought a subject as worthy of his best exertions as the cause of independence itself. Hence he gave towards the formation of our present constitution the benefit of his wisdom in council, and the support of his influence and firmness in bringing its practical operation to a happy result. He has left us in the history of his administration, principles which may serve to guide future rulers; to which it will be safety to adhere; to depart from which would be guilt and danger. It is to be regretted that his administration was cast on stormy and inauspicious times. But notwithstanding the crude and deluding novelties of reform, the wild and eccentric theories of intemperate enthusiasm, which warred against the cross of Christ—against the thrones of earthly Kings, and the bland liberties of peaceful republics, he performed incalculable good for his country; not the least, perhaps, in the early demonstration of the strength of a government which rests for its support on the consent and virtue of a free people.

The study of this constitution can never be useless or uninteresting—it would seem peculiarly appropriate to the present moment.

Extensive confederacies have seldom appeared on the theatre of human affairs, and it has been remarked that "the part they have acted has been a short one." An attentive research into history, affords ample confirmation of the remark. We should be excited to an anxious and diligent enquiry into the frame of ours, lest the principles of self dissolution and decay lurk within it, that in time we may eradicate them, or at least, delay their operation. It will impart to the patriotic enquirer no common gratification, that in the differences between our confederacy, and those over whose premature downfall history laments, and in the improvements in the science of government which later times had made, an exception to the remark may be distinctly discerned in our case.

In the Lycian, Achian, and Etolian leagues of antiquity, the defect consisted in the weakness of the confederate arm. The distrustful republicans of Greece were ever jealous of any sovereignty other than that to which they could appeal in their popular assemblies. A common danger to which each state would, singly, be unequalled, occasioned united exertions of their wisdom and valor. The only attribute of sovereignty, however, which was exercised to any beneficial extent was deliberation. The obvious deficiency was the absence of executive powers. These were left to the states. The necessary consequence was, that a simultaneous effort was seldom made against the common enemy. Federal functionaries were unknown to Grecian politicians. Another error consisted in this, that the sovereignty essential to the creation of a national spirit was too sparingly yielded up to the union—a form of government in which the majesty of state sovereignty was represented in one deliberative body, and the sovereignty of the people of the states viewed as one nation, in another more numerous and popular branch, is looked for elsewhere in vain. For this anomaly, as some might term it, but as we would maintain, a master-piece in politics—we are indebted to American statesmen.

To impart to a federal government sufficient vigor, without impairing the sovereignty of the states, was the most difficult task our statesmen had to perform. The nature of the case admitted not of a distinct and specific enumeration of every possible power which it might be salutary for the general government to exercise, an exact and unquestionable limitation of that exercise in every moment of necessity or peril, yet for all the great and ordinary purposes of national benefit and safety, these powers and limitations are so clearly marked, that the states have little to fear from federal encroachments on their rights. There is no doubt, however, that the greatest danger to the continuance of our national government, results from the possible interference of state rights and federal power. Artful constructions of the constitution and an ambitious grasp at powers, never meant to be entrusted on the part of the latter, may force the former to the lamentable necessity of resistance and severance, which, even at the last moment, may be a hazardous, and difficult extremity. But still we have preventive of no doubtful character. From such calamities, we confidently look for a lasting exemption in the virtue and patriotism of federal rulers—in the wisdom of our senate, and, above all, in the watchful and unyielding jealousy of the states. We admire the federal government as a splendid fabric. We venerate it as an impregnable bulwark against the assaults of foreign aggression. But we cherish, as we cherish life itself, the rights of the states—we have in them our surest safeguards of all that is dear and valuable to freedom—of our religion, liberties, and lives.

It is not alone, from the striking and novel differences between our confederacy, and the ancient leagues that we may anticipate durability to the American union. The atmospheres our people breathe, the soils they cultivate, the zones that encircle the quarter of the globe we inhabit, are so many sources, not of repulsion, but of political consonance and concord. Every intermediate degree of temperature between the heat of a torrid sun and regions of boreal cold, may be felt; the growth of every soil may be found within our limits—the productions of each section furnish the means or the luxuries of life to the other. A lucrative commerce, every moment increasing with the multiplying population and the wants of our inhabitants—keeping pace with the improvements of arts and the discoveries of science, expanding more and more as the capacities of the country are developed, continually open new sources of profit and inducements to enterprise. No unfriendly and illiberal restrictions shall ever fetter this commerce, no ruinous duties shall reduce the well earned gains of the "adventurous ploughman of the deep,"—no hostile winds shall repel the ships of the East from the shores of the South. The rivers of the west shall continue to hurry along their streams its products, through the territories of the same nation to the ocean.

It is true that differing climates form various character and different manners. We see in this no argument against the continuance of political harmony between the several parts of our confederacy. Every new state is the offspring of an elder member of the republic—no essential dissimilarity, therefore, of character—no "jarring discordance of feeling"—no irreconcilable prejudices obstruct intercourse, or mar its pleasures.

He who inhaled in infancy the keen air of a northern, soothes the latitude of age in the mild breezes of a southern latitude; whither he has carried the recollection of the sports of his boyhood, and the habits of his youth. He who once clambered the rocks of the Allegany, now follows the rapid course of the Miami, or reclines him under the orange groves of Louisiana. Think you, he is not now beholding, in fancy, the rugged cliffs and "cloud cap summits" of his native mountain? In every part of our country, father, sons and brethren meet and talk of the plains they have left. Constant emigration and change keep alive a common feeling; innumerable circumstances invite to fellowship; every citizen of the United States enjoys equal blessings, boasts one common origin, participates in one common glory: if a slight exception exist, every day lessens its force.

These, my fellow citizens, are some of the political and moral considerations, which, we would fondly believe, constitute such radical differences between our confederacy and those of which history makes us acquainted, as to justify a rational hope of the permanency of our national compact. In regard to the dangerous tendencies of war upon our union, we have within ourselves the means of avoiding the causes, or of mitigating their evil consequences. The story of the states to which we have alluded, confirms the monitory voice of Washington; for the most durable of ancient leagues was that most renowned for its justice and moderation. "Let us observe justice and moderation to all nations. It will be worthy of a free and enlightened, and at no distant period, a great nation, to furnish to the world, the too novel spectacle of a people always actuated by exalted justice and benevolence."

The philanthropic heart finds the purest enjoyment of its own good, in its sympathies with others. Let us then still further enliven the present occasion, by a view of the state of our fellow men, in other parts of the world. War has ceased—the pursuits of civil life are renewed throughout Europe—its monarchs seem wearied of the dangers of war, and sigh no more for military glory. The conflicts of 30 years have desolated and defaced their fairest possessions, have thrown down the monuments of their arts, and laid in ashes their proudest cities. They would appear to have learnt the value of tranquillity. They have hushed the clangor of the trumpet, and sheathed the sword of destruction—long may it rest within its scabbard. Peace has descended from on high, and diffuses over the nations her gentle influence. The olive expands her branches and exhales her fragrance on the Danube and the Danube, the Thames and the Loire. The waters of the Ganges and Indus flow on unstained with the blood of contending nations. But, alas! this delightful scene is not universal.

The flames of war spread horror and devastation over the south of the American continent. Amidst all the crime and misery ever attending the convulsions of civil discord, one beam of light and hope breaks forth. They are the banners of liberty, which are unfurled on the plains of South America. No mad ambition, no needless fury, no false aggression impels its ye-marry to battle. "It is that principle which neither the rudeness of ignorance can still, nor the enervation of refinement extinguish. It is that principle which teaches man that it is base to suffer, when he ought to act, which, tending to preserve to the species the original designation of providence, spurns at the arrogant distinctions of man, and indicates the independent qualities of his race."

Americans must sympathize with all who are bleeding for their religious and civil rights, and national independence. May some Washington yet arise to lead our brethren of the south to victory, who may erect for them a solid and equal government, and teach them virtue.

Philosophy has long anticipated either in a spirit of sanguine hope, or of a presumptuous persuasion of the efficacy of its maxims, an age when reason and benevolence will universally prevail. A recurrence to the history of past ages falsifies all its splendid predictions. The moral philosophers of the ancient world have furnished all the truths which the reason of man could discover, and recommended their adoption with all the art of rhetoric, and all the charms of eloquence. But their morality, never reaching the heart, left it the sport of every passion. It is not therefore wonderful that the most polite states, even of Greece, exhibited in their private concerns, the most debasing crimes, and the utmost barbarity in their national transactions. The close of the last century has dissipated the delusions of that philosophy which sought no aid from heaven: A light more pure, more bright, now shines with unclouded radiance. The day star which rose over Bethlehem, now illuminates the nations of the earth. It is only the religion of the Son of Man that can produce the exercise of good will amongst men. The rapid extension of this divine religion encourages the hope that some happy era approaches. Its pacific spirit smoothing the asperities of life, and drawing closer together the bands of social love, must infuse itself ere long into cabinets. When citizens and subjects are actuated by its precepts, ambition and wickedness "in high places" will not be endured. May our land be blessed with its fruits—let it be impressed upon the interesting youths, the objects of Washington's beneficence, and your care, that virtue without religion cannot exist, and virtue, it has been inculcated, is the only support of a free government. "Can it be," said Washington, "that heaven has not allied the permanent felicity of a nation with its virtue?" No one at this day asserts that a nation can remain free and happy without those morals which are cherished by a pure and rational religion, and maintained by wise and salutary laws. True we have not yet witnessed amongst ourselves that their decay induces the destruction of freedom and prosperity; but we have learned the indisputable fact from the history of others, and from the warning voice of the best of our own countrymen who have lived before us. Where is there an instance of a people amongst whom religion, and the suppression of vice have been made matter of ridicule and reproach, who have impiously waged war against the Highest, and mocked at the dignity of law, who have not experienced in rapine, violence and crime, the speedy and necessary consequences of their wickedness and folly.

O thou, by whose almighty nod the scale Of empire rises or alternate falls, Send forth the saving virtues round the land In bright patrol: while peace and social Undaunted truth, and dignity of mind, Rough industry and activity untired, With copious life inform and all awake, While in the radiant front superior shines That first paternal virtue, public zeal, Who throws o'er all an equal wide survey; And, ever musing on the common weal, Still labors glorious with some great design.

Appreciating the worth of their fathers and emulous of their great examples may the citizens of this "our own, our native land" continue to the latest day virtuous and free.

Washington, Feb. 24.

We are authorized to state, that the Ship of the Line, now building at the Navy Yard here, will be prepared to Launch on Saturday or Monday next, as the weather and tide may suit.

The situation of the open grounds below the Navy Yard affording many more commodious sites for viewing the launch than any part within the walls of the yard, it is deemed necessary and proper, in order to avoid severe accidents, by admitting too numerous an assemblage of persons in the yard, and, of course, for the general safety of those present, that no persons should be permitted to pass within the gate without having and producing a card of admission. To prevent disappointment, on the morning intended for launching, the color the yard and of the ship will be hoisted sun-ride; and five guns fired, in quick succession, at least two hours previous to time of the ship's going off the stocks. [National Intelligence]

Washington, Feb. 24.

We are authorized to state, that the Ship of the Line, now building at the Navy Yard here, will be prepared to launch on Saturday or Monday next, as the weather and tide may suit.

The situation of the open grounds below the Navy Yard affording many more commodious sites for viewing the launch than any part within the walls of the yard, it is deemed necessary and proper, in order to avoid severe accidents, by admitting too numerous an assemblage of persons in the yard, and, of course, for the general safety of those present, that no persons should be permitted to pass within the gate without saving and producing a card of admission. To prevent disappointment, on the mor-

Gunston for Sale.
THIS elegant estate is situated on the Potomac, 16 miles below Alexandria—it is bounded on three sides by the Potomac and Potomac creek, and contains nearly 3,000 acres of land, level and fertile, to which are attached six shad and herring fisheries, two of which command the river channel. This land will be laid off in four tracts, so as to have one or more fisheries to each; these tracts will be again divided in requisite. This estate is level and beautifully situated, very fertile, and remarkably healthy. Plaster acts with an effect to that of any part of Virginia or Pennsylvania—I have used 500 bushels in twelve months, and such is its beneficial operation, that were I to keep this land I should considerably increase the quantity. A manufacturing mill is distant about two miles, on a stream navigable for vessels carrying 1200 bushels of wheat, where the Baltimore and Dist. of Columbia prices are given for grain being bounded on 3 sides by water, a small extent only of fence is necessary to inclose the whole: it would be admirably adapted to grazing. The improvements are a large and very substantial brick mansion, 40 by 70 feet, with every necessary out-house, three commodious barns, houses for Negroes, and fish houses at each of the fisheries. 120,000 bricks and 1000 bushels of lime are just burnt on the premises. There is a considerable extent of live fence, both useful and ornamental, two orchards of well selected apples and peach, besides an abundance of other choice fruit. More than 150 acres are in clover, 200 in corn, and land is in preparation for sowing 250 bushels of small grain. Any quantity of hay can be cut from the low grounds, some of which (and all might) have been reclaimed at a trifling expense. The river and creeks, abound with wild fowl, particularly canvas backs, the woods with deer and a variety of other game. Mules, cattle, highly improved sheep, farming utensils and household furniture can be had. The terms of sale will be accommodating. Property in any of the cities, negroes, bank stock, western lands, or lands near the River, will be taken in payment. Letters must be addressed to me at Pohick Church, Fairfax county, Virginia.
September 4 GEORGE MASON.

Valuable Property for Sale.
THE subscriber is desirous of selling a handsomely situated farm, on Hunting creek, in Fairfax county, Virginia, adjoining the Mount Vernon estate, and the lands of general Thompson, containing about 240 acres, 80 of which are in wood—about 40 to 50 in thriving meadow of clover and timothy—a part of the residue recently seeded with wheat and rye, and clover, last spring—the whole enclosed with a new post and rail fence. The improvements are, a comfortable and convenient frame dwelling house and kitchen, smoke house, poultry house, granary and stables.—There is on this place a rich and productive garden, and a large body of marsh meadow, from which may be saved annually 100 tons of hay, nearly as nutritious as the best timothy or clover.—With the farm would be sold a number of very valuable horses, cow and sheep; waggon, carts, and a variety of farming utensils and household and kitchen furniture; corn, oats and rye, and 40 tons hay. Also, adjoining the one above described, a farm containing 160 acres, recently enclosed, on which is a brick house, with a trifling expense would render comfortable. The soil is excellent, and a considerable part might be easily converted into meadow.—it would be sold with the other or separately. Also, a number of valuable servants, male and female. To prevent unnecessary application, he would observe, that they will only be sold to persons residing in the District or its vicinity, and not to be carried from it. The subscriber will also sell the greater part of his household furniture, which is new and handsome. For terms of sale or any part of the above property, apply to
